Dear Readers,

In June 2020, we were alerted by the authors that a paper published in the April 2020 issue of the AMJ should be retracted. The article published was:

Dana M, Iman N, Sara S, Amal K, Iman W. The prevalence of self-perceived sensitive facial skin among female students at King Abdulaziz University, Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, 2018-2019 \(A cross-sectional study\). AMJ 2020;13\(4\):114–135.

After conducting an investigation, it was determined that authors discovered many errors, statistical and otherwise, that need to be changed. The Australasian Medical Journal took immediate action, including:

1. Retracting the paper on the AMJ website.
2. The original article is retained unchanged except for a watermark which is included on each page of the article PDF indicating that it has been “retracted”.

We regret that authors on our site have submitted data with statistical errors, and do not condone any infringement of the standards of the journal.

Sincerely, Rick Steves Managing Editor
