

Comprehensive coverage of Australasian Medical Research by AMJ

AMJ 2022 15(1)

---

EDITORIAL NOTE

---

Rick Steves

Managing Editor

Australasian Medical Journal

medicalsci@medicineinsights.com

---

I am pleased to bring forth the first issue of the year 2022. This issue comprises of original research articles and case studies representing new developments in medical science in Australasia. On this occasion of the new beginning of the 2022 post-pandemic, I extend our appreciation for your continued support and readership of AMJ. Previous year has been extremely tough and challenging for not only medical research fraternity but also for general population all across the world. We are committed to bring to you best research outcomes from Australasia with comprehensive coverage of emerging challenges and innovations in medical research. I express my sincere thanks to the editorial board for professional evaluation of the manuscripts, selection and editorial processing yet maintaining the publication time line. We also thank authors for timely incorporation of the peer-review comments and sending the revised manuscripts within the given time frame. Our reviewer board has always been exceptionally dedicated in ensuring positive and constructive comments and suggestions for improving the readability and scientific merit of the manuscript content and presentation. I on behalf of the entire editorial team acknowledge their considerate time and efforts in reviewing the manuscripts. We have always upheld the scientific quality and integrity of our publications.

The focus of AMJ has been to support and promulgate the research contributions from as wide resources as possible from the Australasian region without any bias. We encourage new aspiring researchers to present their findings and observations from their systematic explorations. We have received several manuscripts from Saudi Arabia, Australia, New Zealand and other Australasian countries. However, due to stringent quality control guidelines we could accept only 30% of the articles for publication on this issue. However there are few manuscripts that have been asked for resubmission and hopefully we could bring them to the forefront in our subsequent issues.

The current issue has been designed to provide a comprehensive and yet concise and well balanced information representing the latest and trending medical science research. The composition is also taken care of to include case studies and original research apart from reviews and perspectives.

As it has already been stated we reiterate that the Journal has moved from the current independent status to new banner of Andrew John Publisher. This will enable greater outreach and impact of our research publications and the authors will gain from better citation prospects of their research contributions.

I extend my best wishes for the compilation of the forthcoming issue and I am very much looking forward to new and innovative solutions to the current medical challenges.