

Representation of all major medical specializations in latest issues of AMJ

AMJ 2022 16(1)

Dear Readers,

I am very pleased to present to you the very latest issue of Australasian medical Journal of the current year. As you are aware the Journal was established in the year 2008. Ever since its establishment The Journal strived to present some of the most impactful and contemporary research in medical science that are relevant to the Australasian region and the rest of the world as well. The journal covered literature in the form of case studies, research, reviews including commentaries and opinions to accommodate the latest perspectives. The Journal continues to receive overwhelming submissions from the medical communities from all across the world. In the recent past issues greater emphasis was laid on representing all the medical specialization that is relevant to the contemporary medical science. The core focus was on the current status, the emerging challenges and the innovative technological solutions. The published articles continue to receive good citations and are indexed in elite databases. The Journal has god reputation of maintaining the publication timeliness of all the twelve monthly issues. We are thankful to all the Journal editorial board and peer reviewers and subject experts for their professional services in crafting and curating the journal productions.

Some of the latest articles published by AMJ covered the topics of knowledge and practice of diabetic patients in Saudi Arabia, depression and suicidal tendencies among health care workers during the COVID-19 pandemic, various dimensions of clinical neuroscience and nephrology practices in Australasian region. In the recent issues we followed very stringent guidelines of screening the manuscripts and consequently the number of publication were reduced with only 40% acceptance rate. The new issues will have some of the impactful articles that we have scheduled to release. We are grateful to the editorial board for maintaining the Journal publications standards. The composition of our editorial board is being retained acknowledging their excellent contributions for the charting the Journal development meeting the contemporary research and readership demands.

I take this opportunity to express gratitude to all the contributing and potential authors for choosing AMJ for making their contributions accessible to the medical communities. We look forward to continued success and growth of the Journal. Due to the diversification of medical research there is greater demand for the subject experts having interdisciplinary expertise and I invite potential reviewers to register themselves at our Journal site and provide us the opportunity to avail their professional services.

I also invite medical science professionals, clinicians, physicians, pathologists and pharmacists to publish their recent systematic explorations through AMJ. The Journal is now providing fast tracked peer-review service for faster editorial processing and publication turn-around time so that authors receive authentic recognition for their contributions as well as the copyright of their publications. Should you need further information please feel free to contact the Editor via e-mail. I look forward to an exciting forthcoming issue of the Journal.
