Dear Readers,

It gives me great pleasure to present to you the latest version of 2024. Since its founding in 2008, the Australasian Medical Journal has published academic, systematic research findings twelve times a year. Original research, reviews, case reports, case studies, letters to the editor, commentary, and opinions were among the many article types included in each issue.

The AMJ was founded to support researchers in developing countries in disseminating the findings of their extensive studies. We're committed to reaching that objective. Furthermore, as evidence of our commitment to quality, we continue to receive an increasing number of publications from renowned academics in Australia, Saudi Arabia, China, the United States, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa, Denmark, and other nations.

The Journal's primary goal is to showcase advances in medical science and healthcare, and the majority of its articles are written by authors from Australasia. Globally, the published content is widely indexed in a number of abstracting and indexing databases. The journal is working on compiling volume 16's tenth installment at the moment. High-caliber peer-reviewed articles on a range of subjects, including oesophageal carcinoma, cardiovascular and vascular health, 3D printing software technology, shear wave elastography, diabetes, HIV/AIDS, geriatric medicine, nutrition studies, and haemodynamic studies, have been published in the journal this year. These topics reflect the most recent challenges and ongoing research in the field of medical science that is taking place worldwide.

AMJ has maintained the publication's editorial board with a strong emphasis on Australia. I would like to thank all of the writers who have allowed this magazine to feature their priceless works. In order to ensure that the articles are published on time while taking into account the needs of the journal's current audience, I would like to thank all of our editorial staff and the professional peer reviewers. I'd like to send the journal management my best wishes for the forthcoming regular and special issues' successful development and publication.
