Dear Readers,

I am pleased to introduce the twelfth issue of the 2024 Australasian Medical Journal (AMJ). Since its launch in 2008, AMJ has consistently published high-quality academic research each month, featuring original research, reviews, case reports, commentaries, and opinion pieces. AMJ was founded to provide a platform for researchers from developing countries to share their work, and we are proud to see its global reach expand. We now receive submissions from esteemed scholars worldwide, including Australia, Saudi Arabia, China, the U.S., Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa, and Denmark.

The primary goal of the Australasian Medical Journal (AMJ) is to showcase advancements in medical science and healthcare, with a focus on contributions from the Australasian region. AMJ's content is indexed in numerous global abstracting and indexing databases. We are currently preparing the volume 18. This year's issues have covered a wide range of peer-reviewed topics, including oesophageal carcinoma, cardiovascular and vascular health, 3D printing technology, shear wave Elastography, diabetes, HIV/AIDS, geriatric medicine, nutritional studies, and haemodynamic research, addressing some of today's most pressing global medical challenges.

I extend my heartfelt thanks to the authors for entrusting AMJ with their valuable work, and to our dedicated editorial team and peer reviewers. Their rigorous efforts ensure the timely publication of each issue, contributing to the journal's continued growth and meeting the needs of our global readership.

I would like to express my heartfelt appreciation to the authors for entrusting AMJ with their valuable work. I also extend my sincere thanks to our dedicated editorial team and peer reviewers, whose meticulous efforts ensure the timely release of each issue and contribute to the journal's ongoing growth. Their commitment helps us continually meet the needs of our diverse readership.

Looking ahead, I wish the journal's management continued success in advancing regular issues. We are excited about AMJ's future and invite you to join us as a reviewer or recommend others to support our mission.
