Dear Readers,

I am pleased to introduce the second issue of the 2025 Australasian Medical Journal (AMJ). Since its inception in 2008, AMJ has consistently published high-quality research, including original studies, reviews, case reports, commentaries, and opinion pieces. Founded to provide a platform for researchers from developing countries, AMJ is proud to have expanded its global reach, receiving submissions from esteemed scholars in Australia, Saudi Arabia, China, the U.S., Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa, and Denmark.

The primary goal of AMJ is to highlight advancements in medical science and healthcare, with a focus on contributions from the Australasian region. Our content is indexed in numerous global abstracting and indexing databases, enhancing the journal's visibility. As we prepare Volume 18, Issue 3, this year's topics have included oesophageal carcinoma, cardiovascular health, 3D printing technology, diabetes, HIV/AIDS, geriatric medicine, nutritional studies, and haemodynamic research, addressing critical global health challenges.

I extend my sincere gratitude to the authors for entrusting AMJ with their valuable work and to our dedicated editorial team and peer reviewers. Their rigorous efforts ensure the timely release of each issue, contributing to the journal's growth and fulfilling the needs of our global readership.

Looking ahead, we are excited about AMJ's future and invite you to join us as a reviewer or recommend others. We also encourage you to submit your research and recommend AMJ to colleagues as a trusted academic platform.

For any inquiries, please contact the AMJ Editor via email.
