Dear Reader,

It is a pleasure to present the fourth issue of the 2025 edition of the Australasian Medical Journal (AMJ). Since its launch in 2008, AMJ has remained steadfast in its mission to publish high-quality academic and systematic research on a monthly basis. Each issue features a wide array of scholarly contributions, including original research, reviews, case reports, case studies, letters to the editor, short communications, commentaries, and opinion articles.

AMJ was established with the core aim of offering researchers—particularly those from developing countries—a credible platform to disseminate their valuable work. Over the years, the journal has expanded its global reach, drawing submissions from distinguished authors across the world, including Australia, Saudi Arabia, China, the United States, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa, Denmark, and many other nations.

With a strong emphasis on advancements in medical science and healthcare—especially within the Australasian region—AMJ continues to make meaningful contributions to the global academic landscape. The journal's content is indexed in numerous reputable abstracting and indexing services, reflecting its growing scholarly impact. We are currently in the process of finalizing the eleventh issue of Volume 17. This year's publications have addressed a diverse and timely range of topics such as oesophageal carcinoma, cardiovascular and vascular health, 3D printing applications in medicine, shear wave elastography, diabetes, HIV/AIDS, geriatric medicine, nutritional science, and haemodynamic research—underscoring our commitment to covering the most urgent medical issues of our time.

We are deeply grateful to the authors who have entrusted AMJ with their work, and we sincerely thank our dedicated editorial team and peer reviewers. Their commitment to rigorous review and timely publication has been instrumental in the journal's continued growth and in meeting the expectations of our broad and diverse readership.

Looking ahead, we extend our best wishes to the journal's leadership as they continue to enhance AMJ's reach through both regular and special issues. We invite scholars to contribute by submitting their research papers and encourage the academic community to consider AMJ a trusted outlet for scholarly communication. We also welcome expressions of interest from those wishing to serve as peer reviewers or to recommend qualified colleagues for our review panel.

For any queries or further information, please feel free to reach out to the AMJ Editorial Office via email.
